

David Hudson

One of the world's leading exponents of the didgeridoo, David Hudson is also a great ambassador for Australian indigenous culture across the world. As a founding member of the internationally renowned Tjapukai Dance Theatre, David realised early in his life the power and uniqueness of his Australian aboriginal heritage. David has toured the world performing on his own and with the legendary Yanni. Concert performances in various amazing venues ranging from the Taj Mahal to the Egyptian Pyramids have inspired David's music to new heights. As a recording artist David has achieved world wide popularity and in many parts of the globe regarded as the face of Australian indigenous music. Both David and his music were featured in the American 'Survivor' series filmed in the Australian outback and screened around the world. In addition to his musical abilities David is a well respected actor whose credentials include working in feature films with Marlon Brando and Val Kilmer. Just to annoy the rest of us who spend our life trying to master one skill, David is also a skilled painter whose commissioned works appear around the world.

David Hudson spends a lot of his time 'giving back' to his people, working with young people around Australia encouraging and inspiring them. His catchcry describing aboriginal culture as the 'ancient voice of the future' helps maintain a focus on 'what is to come' rather than to be caught up in the past.

David feels that his involvement in Australian Sun Records not only gives him greater control over the innovative development of his work as an artist but also a chance to share his global experience in the promotion of unique and engaging music. David also has his own company 'Didgeralia', dedicated to developing live performance, aboriginal art and working with young people.
